I, or my spouse, already has a residential homestead lease. Can I still take a lease at Honomū?

You can take a Subsistence Ag homestead lease at Honomū because the Act allows you and your spouse, to have a residential homestead lease and an agricultural homestead lease. HOWEVER, there are two (2) other rules that you have to consider:

✓ You and your spouse can only have one (1) house; and
✓ You have to reside on the same island as the Ag Lease.

If you, or your spouse, have a residential homestead lease on another island (not Big Island), to take a lease at Honomū:

• You or your spouse would have to surrender or transfer the residential homestead lease (see back side for details on who you can transfer to); and
• You and your spouse would have 3 years to reside on the Big Island by building a residence at Honomū or finding other housing arrangements on the Big Island.

If you, or your spouse, have a residential homestead lease on the Big Island, to take a lease at Honomū:

• You and your spouse would not be able to construct a house at Honomū.
• If you wanted to build a house at Honomū, you or your spouse would have to surrender or transfer the residential homestead lease (see back side for details on who you can transfer to).

If I take the Subsistence Ag Homestead Lease at Honomū, can I transfer it to someone else?

Yes, you can accept the Subsistence Ag Homestead lease at Honomū and transfer it to anyone who is 50% Hawaiian or you can transfer the lease to your children, grandchildren, or spouse who are at least 25% Hawaiian. The transferee has to cultivate the lot within 60 days.

If I take the Subsistence Ag Homestead Lease at Honomū, who can I leave the lease to after I pass?

You would have to designate a successor to your lease. Eligible successors are: your parents, a surviving spouse of your children, your sibling, a surviving spouse of your sibling, your niece/nephew—who are 50% Hawaiian and at least 18 years old. In addition, eligible successors are: your children, grandchildren, or your spouse—who are at least 25% Hawaiian and over 18 years old.

What if I take the Subsistence Ag Homestead Lease at Honomū and don’t designate a successor?

Upon your passing, DHHL puts a legal ad in the newspaper asking any eligible successor (see answer above for who is eligible) to submit their paperwork. DHHL determines who gets your lease, based on who submitted their paper work. If you have a balance on a home loan, the successor would have qualify to assume the loan. Please aloha your family and DHHL by designating a successor if you get a lease.
